Life Is a Gift

Received from Mrs.Mahjabeen Lakhani, CA-USA.

Today before you say an unkind word - Think of someone who can't speak.

Before you complain about the taste of your food - Think of someone who has nothing to eat..

Before you complain about your husband or wife - Think of someone who's crying out to GOD for a companion.

Today before you complain about life - Think of someone who died too early on this earth.

Before you complain about your children - Think of someone who desires children but they're barren...

Before you argue about your dirty house someone didn't clean or sweep - Think of the people who are living in the streets.

Before whining about the distance you drive - Think of someone who walks the same distance with their feet.

And when you are tired and complain about your job - Think of the unemployed, the disabled and those who wish they had your job.

But before you think of pointing the finger or condemning another - Remember that not one of us is without sin.

And when depressing thoughts seem to get you down - Put a smile on your face and think: you're alive and still around.

Work ethics: Smart talk

One of the biggest challenges in today's workplace is communication. It is truly an art to be able to gauge when a situation calls for you to speak up or else hold your counsel. There is wisdom in knowing when to speak and when not to. Knowing the difference is the key to professionalism.

Getting drawn into office gossip happens to almost everyone from time to time. While in the short run, it may seem like a harmless way to bond; the problem is that sometimes we say too much. The dynamics of the workplace are such that there are situations in which saying less would have been more.

Avoiding confrontation at work is a necessary and useful skill. There will always be a clash of personalities, but occasionally, prudence dictates keeping the mouth closed when opening it would cause more problems than it would solve. How do you judge when's the right time to do what?

Following these tips will help you determine the best approach in various situations in order to make the office a more conducive place for everyone.

Do not criticize your boss.

This is one workplace edict that has remained sacrosanct over the ages. The boss is always right. Even though some bosses encourage input from the workers, it is advisable to keep your mouth shut until asked and keep your responses to a minimum. You can never go wrong if you keep it simple.

Another thing to avoid is maligning your boss and participating in gossip in the office even if you are supported by other colleagues. You don't know who's going to tell who what you said, so don't say anything that could make you look bad if the wrong person heard it. Even if it's in jest, behind their back, or outside of the work premises, don't do it. Also be careful about making derogatory statements about your boss on social networking sites like Facebook because they are not deemed personal spaces but are public forums.

Do not get defensive

Always take a moment before responding to anything that makes you feel defensive. If someone accuses you of something you didn't do, think for a minute before responding instead of immediately confronting them. That way, you'll be calmer when you do speak.

Don't be too transparent about your personal feelings about your colleagues. There will be people you don't particularly like, but you can't treat them differently than the people whom you do favor. Try to ensure that you are polite and pleasant to everyone, all the time.

Happy New Year

JANUARY 2011 ISSUE # 19

Be diplomatic at all times

Put in a genuine good word when your colleagues deserve it, and do not criticise when they blunder. If you are asked to comment on an employee's performance, the recommended approach is to be honest, yet tactful. Mention the person's areas for improvement related to the job, but make sure you highlight their strengths as well. People are less defensive if critique is sandwiched between words of praise.

Do not comment on your colleagues' personal affairs

Respect your colleagues' private space and they will respect yours. Do not read their personal correspondences over their shoulder or eavesdrop on their conversations. Even if a colleague chooses to share their family affairs or romantic involvements with you, try not to be over-zealous in offering advice. In all probability, they are not looking for counsel but just want a set of ears to listen to them.

Invite your colleagues to your home

Develop a working relationship with your colleagues. Get to know your co-workers and try to become friendly with them. This will make office life more pleasant for everyone, and may head off conflicts. You can bond there and even do some constructive planning together. But do not be hasty, take your time, understand how friendly the people in your workplace are, and then subtly begin the invitations. It is, of course, a given that you should not have any vested interests in inviting your colleagues (or superiors) over.
